Conclusions for amalgam are still omnipresent and amalgam tattoos remain one of the most common causes of intraoral pigmentation, we consider amalgam tattoos as an important differential diagnostic consideration, when you evaluate the suspicious patients for the mucous melanoma of the oral cavity. We describe the characteristics of these two phenomena and present a case of case that illustrates differential diagnostic problems. The pigmented lesions of the mucosa must always be biopsies if the diagnosis is uncertain [2, 5, 6, 8, 13].
